

A photograph showing a person's lower body from the side, wearing dark jeans and lace-up boots, walking across a sandy beach. The person's right hand is visible, pointing towards a dense skyline of skyscrapers in the distance. The buildings are a mix of architectural styles, with prominent towers like the Burj Khalifa and the Burj Al Arab. The sky is clear and blue.

THANK GOD FOR MY LIFE

Carlo Barberio (Italy)

[to be translated] Zara, Joy e Fortuna, tre ragazze nigeriane giunte in Italia con la speranza di una vita migliore, anche se questo significa lavorare come prostitute giorno e notte con il freddo atroce, la pioggia o la febbre. L'unica cosa che conta è restare il più possibile per strada per cercare di estinguere il grosso debito contratto per arrivare qui. La sola via per raggiungere l'Europa, infatti, per una ragazza nigeriana, è affidarsi agli sfruttatori di essere umani, i quali alzano un business di proporzioni immense trasportando e schiavizzando donne, spesso anche minorenni.

Tuttavia Zara, Joy e Fortuna hanno avuto fede, fede nella loro vita e nei loro sogni e sono riuscite a superare l'inferno della strada, trovando alternative di vita che normalmente sono a loro nascoste e precluse.

RETURN TO NORMALITY

Pericles Loucopoulos (Greece)

Greece has had a long tradition of welcoming immigrants. In recent years it has helped new waves of immigrants who left their country forced by the brutality of war, by political, or religious persecution, or even by extreme economic hardship. Powerless, and uprooted from their homes, men, women and children, after often perilous journeys, have found a safe haven in many cities of Greece. Sixty kilometres Southeast of Athens lies the seaside port town of Lavrio with a population of just over 10,000 inhabitants. There is a migration centre that operates since 1947 where in recent years it has helped new waves of immigrants, the majority of whom are in a state of "limbo", waiting for their situation to clear up, not knowing if and when they will be given asylum, if they will settle in the country or move further on. This uncertainty makes it difficult for them to invest in the present. And yet life must go on. They organise themselves, their children go to local schools, they interact with local residents, they enjoy leisure activities and try to embrace normality as much as possible.

CORPUS CHRISTI IN CHICAGO

Iwona Biedermann (USA)

Corpus Christi is a festival that the Catholic Church has celebrated to honor the Eucharist since the XIII century. The name "Corpus Christi" is a Latin phrase that refers to the body of Christ. Young girls scatter flower petals on the streets to welcome Jesus, who is believed to walk the streets with the people during the Corpus Christi processions. The celebration is an official public holiday in Poland and traffic is stopped for quite a long time. Corpus Christi celebrated in Chicago is an example of how the polish immigrants bring and cultivate their religious and cultural traditions. In Chicago, there is no official holiday that Thursday and many parishes serving polish community celebrate Corpus Christi on Sunday after the mass. The photographs are from procession organized by Holy Trinity Church, which has become a Polish Mission in 1987. The church has served the community since 1872 and all services are offered in the Polish language. During the procession, traffic is stopped while girls are scattering flower petals and participants stop to pray at temporary shrines.

UNKNOWN PRAYER IN URBAN ATHENS

Stefanos Chronis (Greece)

Every person at these photos is an immigrant or a refugee. Their places of worship is urban Athens, some of them half-hidden, are underground or abandoned warehouses, an old orthodox temple, an old small theater. The nationalities that are praying are Pakistani Shiites, Indians Sikh, Ethiopian Coptic Christians, Eritrean Coptic Christians, and Pentecostals from Nigeria. All these places are unified by mystery, emotion, religious ecstasy and a unique aura. But they have diversities also cause of the many different cultures, from the way they dress, the way they sing.

THE INVISIBLE PEOPLE

Stepan Rudik (Poland)

According to the official estimate there are about 2 million of Ukrainians living in Poland. The influx started after the Maidan revolt in 2014 and accelerated since the visa requirement was dropped by Poland. Usually the immigrants come for seasonal work and stay over. They don't see their future in the Ukraine, they feel more comfortable and safe in Poland. Despite their important numbers I think that for Poles they are invisible. Being immigrants, they are not entitled to any kind of state backing —they look for any work and try to survive. In most cases the work is illegal, the work permit is an unheard of document among butchers, cleaners, construction and warehouse workers, baby sitters and housekeepers.

LATINO MEN IN CALIFORNIA

Eric Davidove (USA)

This project is a collection of photos I made of some Latino men that I observed while walking around the Mission district in San Francisco and the Historic Downtown District in Los Angeles

ESCAPE FROM HOMS

Graziano Perotti (Italy)

Photo reportage from Jordan. Stories of families escaped from Homs (Syria). The reportage tells through photographs and interviews the stories of some families that escaped from Homs. All certified refugees, some live in the unconventional camps in the region of Mafraq, on the border with Syria. Hoping to find more job opportunities, they went there after leaving the authorized Zaatari camp because they did not feel safe (there was a lot of violence against women and children). Other families live in miserable rooms in the suburbs of Amman. They survive thanks to humanitarian aids but carry the weight of tragic life stories. Many of the interviewed families currently have their fathers and children in the prisons of Assad, while some have been released after suffering extreme violence. In Syria, they have never wanted to be photographed or interviewed for fear of retaliation. They have done it now because they haven't heard their loved ones for months. They have chosen to tell their tragic stories to sensitize people. There is also someone who has three little children with thalassemia and hopes that, in a situation where in Jordan the treatments are very expensive, people will help after hearing their story.
